

How Else do Anthropologists Ask Questions about Food?

---

How Else do Anthropologists Ask Questions about Food?

Food is an endlessly rich topic for anthropological inquiry—it is literally food for thought! Over this term, we will read works by other authors that are shaped by these and other anthropological approaches to asking questions and finding answers. As you work on your food essays and research papers, you may also engage with other approaches. This course will only give you a taste of the diverse ways in which anthropologists study food, so you might consider taking additional classes, such as AN 556: The Evolution of the Human Diet (<https://www.bu.edu/academics/cas/courses/cas-an-556/>), which provides an evolutionary perspective from biological anthropology of human nutrition.

