

What is Fermentation?

What is Fermentation?

Fermentation describes the process by which anaerobic respiration, the conversion of carbohydrates to energy without using oxygen, by microorganisms is used to transform foods. Fermentation is widely used today to produce familiar foods such as bread, pickles, cheeses, beer, wine, and even chocolate.